LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS:

A COMPLETE ALPHABET OF

Floral Emblems.

In Eastern lands they talk in flowers,
And they tell in a garland their loves and cares;
Each blossom that blooms in the garden bowers
On its leaves a mystic language bears.

Then gather a wreath from the garden bowers, And tell the wish of thy heart in flowers.

Percival.

INTRODUCTION.

HE Language of Flora has been traced by its students to widely different sources, each presenting some true claim to the title, yet none so entirely subverting those of others as to stand forth alone as its originator; for truly the origin of this voice of the flowers is coeval with their creation, and is still a tongue sufficiently simple and attractive to have a charm for every student of Nature.

It is, in truth, no creature of modern art, but the free-born child of unsophisticated nature. "Lovely as the rose," "Fair as the lily," "Modest as the violet," are phrases that seem to come naturally into use, without thought that in this emblematic employment lies the germ of true poetry and the symbolic language of Flora; and though to these will be found added, in the present volume, many where in the object seems less suggestive of the sense, and where the idea sought to be conveyed is more complex and difficult intelligently to symbolize, yet in this is only presented the floral tongue passing through the same progressive stages that have characterized the annals of every spoken language. In a rude and primitive state, the words are few and simple that suffice to clothe in language the thoughts and desires of an untutored race of men; but with every increasing want, and every new desire, names and forms of thought must be created, until the brief vocabulary of the savage tribe swells into the complex dictionary of an intelligent and civilized people. And so has it been with this universal language. "He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down," is the expressive and universally intelligible language of Scripture. And no less does it easily prefigure hope than frailty. We strew them over the shroud of departed love, and plant them to bloom brightly above the grave, that they may speak in spring of a brighter season of hope; and in summer of that heavenly clime that knows only of an eternal summer and a cloudless sky; and, in all seasons, of love, and purity, and peace. To these, the simple expressions of natural feeling, have been added from time to time, from the pages of classic poetry and the more complex fancies of later writers, a series of ideas attached to every flower, by means of which the nosegay may be made to take the place of more formal epistles.

For the more complicated uses of this beautiful language, a few hints may be necessary, to show how extensive is the range of thought its alphabet may communicate. For example, if a flower be given reversed, it implies the opposite of that thought or sentiment which it is ordinarily understood to express: again, a rosebud from which the thorns have been removed, but which has still its leaves, conveys the sentiment, "I fear, but I hope," the thorns implying fear, as the leaves hope; remove the leaves and thorns and then it signifies that "There may be neither hope nor fear;" while, again, a single flower may be made emblematic of a variety of ideas; a rosebud that has been already used and deprived of its thorns, says, "There is much to hope;" but stripped of its leaves also, it tells, "There is everything to fear." The expression also of almost any flower may be varied by changing its position. Place the marigold upon the head, for instance, and it signifies "distress of mind"—on the bosom, "listlessness." And it may be added, when a flower is given, the pronoun I is understood by changing it to the right, thou by inclining it to the left.

The language of flowers is a study at once interesting and innocent, cultivating, as it does, a taste for the works of nature, filling the soul with the sweetest emotions, and presenting to view one of the most enchanting phases of a beautiful world full of wonders.

Flowers are the interpreters of the sweetest sentiments of our nature, and imbibe their charm from love itself—love pure and chaste—the inspiration of the Deity. The expression of this divine passion should be divine also: and for this purpose, what in nature is so suitable as flowers?

The sincere lover frequently finds it impossible to convey his sentiments in words, if he can even find courage to utter them. Here, then, is a medium by which he may communicate with his mistress in a manner at once delicate and impassioned, and laud her virtues and beauty in terms that, in spoken language, would appear over-strained and hyperbolic.

For instance, to tell a lady that she is a splendid beauty, and that you live but in her smiles, would probably excite a doubt of her lover's sincerity; but present her with an amarvllis and a current, the sentiment is delicately conveyed, and would doubtless be approved. Then, for those who are so bashful, or so uninitiated in the language of Cupid, that the very thought of making a declaration throws them into an intermittent fever, what more have they to do than present the object of their affections with a red tulip? If a lover's suit is accepted, he will receive in return a double daisy. Should the lady not be influenced by similar feelings, she may return a sprig of spiderwort; and should her objection be positive and insurmountable, a variegated pink. This delicate mode of signifying her adverse sentiments would surely soften the painful chagrin a rejected admirer must always experience.

In the East, the language of flowers has long been a favorite mode of communication among lovers. The education of the oriental women being less liberal than in more civilized countries, the art of writing but little practiced among them, and freedom of intercourse strictly prohibited, some method of correspondence became indispensable, and flowers, there so beautiful and plenteous, naturally presented themselves.

"Each blossom that blooms in their garden bowers, On its leaves a mystic language bears."—PERCIVAL.

The whole of their emblems, however, have not been transmitted to us, and in the collection we propose to lay before our readers, though much pains have been taken to attach a reason for each emblem, yet some will necessarily be found arbitrary; and if some of the symbols vary from previous authority, it must be remembered that this objection occurs only in oral language, the same word having a totally different signification in different countries.

The following complete Vocabulary of flowers will enable our readers to compose wreaths or bou quets to convey their sentiments and wishes as thus prettily expressed by the poet:-

"I dare not whisper what I feel for thee, But I will let the flowers, upon whose leaves Hath love its language written, plead my suit; Then listen, lovely lady. First, I send The rose of hundred leaves, ambassador. The amaryllis next—an emblem bright And beauteous, of thyself; interpreter Of my own thoughts, the cedar-leaf; then for thee The pure white lily, for myself the pink, Red as the sky at sunset; mignonette For thee, for me the hay-leaf; the green fern For thee, the oak-geranium for myself; The hare-bell next, another emblem sweet Of thee, the current for myself; again, The Austrian rose that breathes of thee such truth. The jonquil whispering timidly for me. The silver daisy and the jasmine wreathed, Emblems again of thee: and for myself, When the swift hours are warning me to leave, I send the thyme to whisper thee the cause; The orange blossom next, more truth of thee, With the rich multiflora rose to crown the wreath. Then, oh then, cluster'd with my hopes and fears, Warm from repeated pressures to my heart, And trembling with its beatings, close entwined I give the myrtle's green and polish'd leaves With the rose-hued chrysanthemum. With pride I place thy wreath upon thy radiant brow, And mine with the red tulip in its midst, I lay in deepest reverence at thy feet."

In addition to the emblems of the various flowers, it may be necessary to give a few rules as to the method of presenting them. Our readers are to understand that the meaning of a symbol varies according to the position in which it is placed. The marigold is symbolical of grief and pain; thus, if placed on the head, it denotes trouble of mind: on the heart, it refers to the anxieties of love; on the bosom, it expresses the lassitude and weariness of ennui.

A flower presented in its natural state conveys a sentiment affirmatively; and the sentiment changes in the same degree that the state of the flower is changed, until it is completely negatived. Thus, a withered white rose, inclined to the right, signifies, "I loved you once;" but if inclined to the left, it means, "You loved me once."

A little attention to these simple rules will soon perfect the youthful and loving in the poetic language of flowers, and enable them to interchange their their sentiments unscanned by vulgar eyes.

THE FLOWER-DIAL.

Twas a lovely thought to mark the hours, As they floated in light away, By the opening and the folding flowers, That laugh to the summer's day.

Thus had each moment its own rich hue,
And its graceful cup and bell,
In whose colored vase might sleep the dew,
Like the pearl in an ocean-shell.

To such sweet signs might the time have flowed In a golden current on, Ere from the garden, man's first abode, The glorious guests were gone.

So might the days have been brightly told— Those days of songs and dreams,— When shepherds gathered their flocks of old By the blue Arcadian streams.

So in those isles of delight that rest Far off in a breezeless main, Which many a bark, with a weary guest, Has sought, but still in vain.

Yet is not life, in its real flight,

Marked thus—even thus—on earth,
By the closing of one hope's delight,

And another's gentle birth?

Oh! let us live so that flower by flower,
Shutting in turn, may leave
A lingerer still for the sun-set hour—
A charm for the shaded eve.

Hemans.

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

In eastern lands they talk of flowers,
And they tell in a garland their loves and cares
Each blossom that blooms in their garden bowers
On its leaves a mystic language bears.

The rose is a sign of joy and love,
Young blushing love in its earliest dawn;
And the mildness that suits the gentle dove,
From the myrtle's snowy flower is drawn,

Innocence shines in the lily's bell,
Pure as the heart in its native heaven;
Fame's bright star and glory's swell,
By the glossy leaf of the bay are given.

The silent, soft, and humble heart,
In the violet's hidden sweetness breathes;
And the tender soul that cannot part,
A twine of evergreen fondly wreathes.

The cypress that daily shades the grave, Is sorrow that mourns her bitter lot; And faith, that a thousand ills can brave, Speaks in thy blue leaves—forget-me-not.

Then, gather a wreath from the garden bowers, And tell the wish of thy heart in flowers.

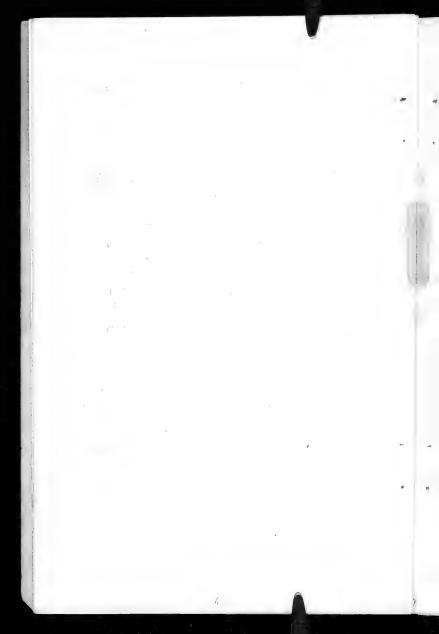

Percival.

THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS.

Teach thee their language sweet? I know no tongue,
No mystic art those gentle things declare,
I ne'er could trace the schoolman's trick among
Created things so delicate and rare;
Their language, pr'ythee? why, they are themselves
But bright thoughts syllabled to shape and hue;
The tongue that erst was spoken by the elves.
When tenderness as yet within the world was new.

And oh, do not their soft and starry eyes—
Now bent on earth, to heaven now meekly pleading,
Their incense fainting as it seeks the skies,
Yet still from earth with freshening hope receding—
Say, do not these to every heart declare,
With all the silent eloquence of truth,
The language that they speak is Nature's prayer,
To give her back those spotless days of youth?

It might strike the casual observer as something incredible, if not impossible, that such an immense and varied amount of matter could be crowded into a book of the merely nominal price of a dollar and a half; but the work contains 436 large pages of small type, closely printed in double column, and a perusal of it will convince the most skeptical that the only thing to be wondered at in it, is the extremely low price at which it is offered. Bound in extra cloth, with gilt side and back.....

The Perfect Gentleman. A book of Etiquette and Eloquence. Containing information and instruction for those who desire to become brilliant or conspicuous in General Society, or at Parties, Dinners or Popular Gatherings, etc. It gives directions how to use wine at table, with Rules for judging the quality thereof, Rules for Carving, and a complete Etiquette of the Dinner Table, including Dinner Speeches, Toasts and Sentiments, Wit and Conversation at Table, etc. It has also an American Code of Etiquette and Politeness for all occasions. It also contains all the necessary information relating to the Rules of Etiquette to be observed in fashionable and official society at Washington, and this alone makes it valuable to any one who visits that city, either for pleasure or business. It also contains, Model Speeches, with directions how to deliver them, Duties of the Chairman at Public Meetings, Forms of Preambles and Resolutions, etc. handsomely bound volume of 335 pages.....
